Postal Service to Combat Meter Fraud

NEW YORK, NY Instead of paying for postage, Marcello Boccia would photocopy a postage meter stamp, alter the date, stick it on an envelope, and put it in the mailbox. Today, paying a 29 cent stamp doesn't look that expensive to Boccia, who faces up to five years in prison and $250,000 in fines after pleading guilty to defrauding the Postal Service.

It is this type of postage meter fraud that is growing and costing the Postal Service millions in revenue, said Postmaster General Marvin Runyon.

"The Postal Inspection Service is stepping up enforcement and offering rewards up to $50,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of anyone who defrauds the Postal Service," Runyon said, in announcing an initiative to counter the problem.

According to Runyon, the Inspection Service is in the early stages of investigating postage meter fraud, but studies already indicate that the Postal Service could be losing millions of dollars annually through fraudulent meter schemes.

"With this in mind, I have ordered our Inspection Service to aggressively go after the crooks. I want to put the thieves on notice that we will increase our enforcement efforts and go after those who set out to defraud the nation's mail and cheat the millions of honest postal customers who must pick up the tab," said Runyon.

Runyon was joined at the press conference by executives from Pitney Bowes, Ascom Hasler, Friden Neopost, and Postalia. These four meter manufacturers lease 1.4 million meter machines, which accounted for $18 billion in postage revenue during fiscal year 1992. "The postage meter industry is also working with us to achieve a long-term solution. Among other things, the industry and postal management will strengthen administrative procedures designed to eliminate meter fraud," said Runyon.

As for Boccia's scheme, Postal authorities were alerted when 400 pieces of suspect mail turned up bearing the return address of his home. A "silent partner" in Sommerville, New Jersey video store, Boccia obtained copies of real postage meter stamps from the video store and made color photocopies.

"I don't want the Postal Service to have to pass on the costs of the unscrupulous to America's rate payers," said Runyon. "I encourage anyone with information on meter fraud to call our toll-free number --1-800-654-8896."

Know you nudibranchs

They are colorful carnivorous creatures found in the ocean and its estuaries, commonly called sea slugs. Both Fiji and Norfolk Island have issued stamps in 1993 depicting these fascinating creatures without shells.

Their size can range from 5 to 250mm, depending on the species. While they must mate, all nudibranchs are hermaphroditic - both male and female. Diets include sponges, corals, and other nudibranchs!

Fiji's stamps were issued on July 27 with six stamps designed by Gordon Drummond and printed by Leigh-Morden Printing Ltd. Norfolk Island set of six debuted on July 7 were designed by Philatelic Studios, Melbourne, and printed also by Leigh-Morden.
